TO THE READER.

THAT this Concordance doth not pretend to comd more than any other larger ones, but to cone principal substance of them all in little room.

y observing one or more principal words of any bered text, and what are the three first letters of and searching under answerable words in the dance, the sentence will be found.

The original words, whether nouns or verbs, are 1 in CAPITAL letters, and those derived from them come after in Italics.

4. Where words are found in many places, the plural is distinguished from the singular, and the parts of verbs ending in—ed,—est,—eth, from their original. But when the examples are few, no such distinction is made, but may be easily observed.

5. The concordant words, except the first, are marked by the first letter a. b. c. &c; and the mark — stands for several words marked in Italics: divine persons are noted by answerable capitals.

6. Even other words, especially names of divine persons, are often marked by one or more of their first letters, that the sense of the line might be more complete.
